FORMER BJP CITY PRESIDENT VARUN PATIL'S LETTER TO KDMC COMMISSIONER AND TRANSPORT MANAGERS

KALYAN, ANJALI SWAMI :

Former Bharatiya Janata Party city president and former corporator Varun Patil has written to the KDMC Commissioner and Transport Manager demanding an increase in the frequency of ring route transport buses running between Durgadi and Birla College Road in Kalyan.The number of bus services running between Kalyan Railway Station and Durgadi Birla College Road is very limited. Due to this, local citizens , school students , employees , and the elderly are facing difficulty in traveling daily. The current daily buses are running irregularly and are not available on time. As a result, people have to depend on private transport , which is costly and inconvenient for many. However, for the convenience of citizens, the number of bus services on this route should be increased , so that the inconvenience of passengers is avoided, VarunPatil, on behalf of the BJP, has demanded.

'Ahead Of Many Nations': Mohan Bhagwat Highlights India's Global Rise, Support To World

SIKAR/RAJSTHAN,

UMANG RAWAL :

Rashtriya Swayam sevak Sangh (RSS) chief Mohan Bhagwat high lighted India's growing stature on the global stage, stating that the country continues to rise and support the world when the need arises.Addressing a gathering in Rajasthan's Sikar, Bhagwat said, "We are seeing it today that every time the world is in need, India rises." He emphasized that India's post-independence journey has defied all odds and skepticism about its growth. He proudly said that today, India is leaving a mark at a global level with its development."If we look at our country's history after independence, based on that history, no one could say that India will rise. But today, India is rising and marking its presence in the world despite the big powers," he added.Referring to the early years of an independent India, Bhagwat pointed out that some observers had doubts whether democracy would survive in the country. The RSS chief added that India is way ahead of many nations when it comes to democracy."Some people had predicted that democracy would not be able to function in India after independence. Today, when we talk about democracy, India is ahead of many countries of the world."Bhagwat's remarks come at a time when India continues to play an increasingly active role in global affairs, from diplomacy to economic partnerships, while also navigating complex domestic challenges.

From Rahul To Priyanka And Varun, Estranged Gandhi Cousins Find Common Ground On Stray Dog Issue

NEW DELHI, (AGENCIES) :

It has taken the stray dog issue to momentarily unite the deeply divided Gandhi family. Politically and personally, they may share little in common today — but their love for animals, especially dogs, remains a rare point of convergence.Union Minister and animal rights crusader Maneka Gandhi, her son Varun Gandhi, and his Congress cousins Rahul and Priyanka Gandhi Vadra, have all publicly opposed the Supreme Court's recent directive to move stray dogs in Delhi-NCR to shelters.Maneka Gandhi, a pioneer in animal protection laws, has long championed humane treatment of animals. Her son, BJP MP Varun Gandhi, shares her passion. On the other side of the political aisle, Rahul Gandhi is known for his affection for animals — his pet dog Pidi once became a social media sensation and the subject of countless memes. Recently, Rahul Gandhi even travelled to Goa to adopt two pets, gifting one to his mother Sonia Gandhi. PriyankaVadra and her husband Robert Vadra, meanwhile, are known for their large family of golden retrievers.So it was unsurprising that all four spoke against the SC order. Rahul Gandhi called the ruling “a step back from decades of humane, science-backed policy,” stressing that sterilisation, vaccination, and community care could keep streets safe “without cruelty.” PriyankaVadra wrote, “Surely there is a better and kinder way to deal with this situation, one that keeps these innocent animals safe.”Varun Gandhi wrote on X, “The Suo Moto order on stray dogs by the Supreme Court is an institutionalisation of cruelty and a harbinger of a legal structure that seeks to punish those who cannot fend for themselves.”The public show of unity stands out, given that the family split bitterly after Indira Gandhi's death. Maneka Gandhi left the family home soon after, and when she and Varun joined the BJP, the rift with Sonia, Rahul, and Priyanka became complete. Rahul once even remarked that Varun now belonged to an ideology he could not accept.Interestingly, when Indira Gandhi passed away, even her pets were divided between the two branches of the family — a telling symbol of the split.While their shared stand on the stray dog issue may not herald political reconciliation, it has, for a moment, bridged decades of distance. In today's charged political climate, it might remain just that — a rare, fleeting alignment brought about by a common love for animals.

Bengal Administration Pushes Back On EC Order To Suspend Officers Over Voter Roll Irregularities

KOLKATA, B BANERJEE :

The West Bengal administration has not implemented the Election Commission's (EC) directive to suspend and file FIRs against two Electoral Registration Officers (EROs), two Assistant Electoral Registration Officers (AEROs), and a data entry operator over alleged irregularities in the processing of Form-6 applications for revising electoral rolls in AC No. 137 BaruiপুরBada and AC No. 206 Moyna.In a letter to the Secretary of the Election Commission of India, the Chief Secretary of West Bengal detailed that an internal enquiry and review have been initiated into the matter. The letter argued that taking “premature and harsh” action against the officers before the enquiry's completion could be demoralising, especially for officials who have generally demonstrated sincerity and competence.As an interim measure, two officials— Sudipta Das, PAAO, Tamruk Block and AERO, 206-Moyna AC, and SurojitHalder, Data Entry Operator, 137 BaruiপুরBada AC—have been withdrawn from electoral revision and election-related duties. The Chief Secretary assured that a detailed action-taken report will be submitted after the enquiry is completed.The letter also highlighted that district-level and field officers handle significant workloads, often delegating tasks to subordinate staff in good faith. It suggested that launching disciplinary proceedings at this stage would be unnecessarily severe.The response was expected, as chief minister Mamata Banerjee had publicly stated last week that her administration would not suspend the officers in question.

However, the EC's order was not limited to suspension; it also directed that an FIR be registered against them.Sources within the EC told News18 that in the past three months, all District Election Officers (DEOs), EROs, and other officials had been instructed to exercise extreme vigilance, with written undertakings taken to that effect. “Even after such measures, how could this happen?” a senior EC source asked.The poll body had written a strongly worded letter on August 8 to the Chief Secretary, questioning why its order had not been implemented. According to sources, the EC is unlikely to be satisfied with the Chief Secretary's reply, and the letter could trigger further consequences. Experts say the Officers' Association may also move court, potentially setting the stage for a legal battle.

Sharad Pawar Rules Out Joining Forces With Ajit Pawar’s NCP: ‘Will Never Support..’

MUMBAI, SURESH DHERE :

Nationalist Congress Party (Sharadchandra Pawar faction) chief and veteran politician Sharad Pawarruled out joining forces with his nephew AjitPawar's faction, saying he would never support a BJP-led alliance.His remarks came after Sharad and Ait Pawar were seen together for the engagement ceremony of the former's grandson, Yugendra Pawar, at the residence of Yugendra's fiancée, Tanishka Kulkarni, in Mumbai.Yugendra is the son of Shrinivas Pawar, the younger brother of Deputy Chief Minister Ajit Pawar.The engagement ceremony saw attendance from the prominent members of the Pawar family, including SupriyaSule, along with her husband and two children. The NCP split after AjitPawar's 2023 rebellion, when he decided to join the BJP-led Mahayuti alliance. This cast doubts over the strength of the Pawar family ties. This was further tested in the 2024 assembly elections, where Yugendra was defeated by his uncle Ajit Pawar in the Baramati constituency, and Ajit Pawar's wife Sunetra was defeated by her sister-in-law SupriyaSule. Earlier, in June, SharadPawar's grandnephew, RohitPawar, had stoked speculations over a possible merger of the party with AjitPawar's faction, saying that SupriyaSule was “entrusted” to take a final call on the matter.However, SharadPawar quickly shot down rumours of joining hands with his nephew's NCP faction, saying he could not join hands with someone allied with the BJP. “We cannot join hands with those who have joined hands with

BJP. We will take along only those who believe in the ideology of Gandhi, Shahu, Phule and Ambedkar,” he said at an event. SharadPawarOn India's Foreign Policy

Meanwhile, the NCP-SP on Saturday also took a swipe at Prime Minister NarendraModi and the Central government over India's foreign policy and growing tensions with neighbours.“If you look at the map of India, Pakistan is against us, Nepal is angry with us, Bangladesh is angry with us, Sri Lanka is angry with us. All our neighbours are moving away from us. PM Modi should not ignore this. He should pay attention to improving relations with them,” he said.He also criticised US President Donald Trump's 50% tariffs on Indian goods. “This is an attempt to pressurise us... I do not want to say today that diplomacy has failed... Nobody has control over Trump. He does whatever comes to his mind. Not much attention should be paid to him,” he added.

Historic Workshop on Eco-Friendly Ganesh Idols Receives Unprecedented Response in Kalyan-Dombivli

KALYAN, SHRIKANT KHUPERKAR :

On the auspicious day of Angark Chaturthi, 12th August 2025, the Kalyan-Dombivli Municipal Corporation, in collaboration with the Education Today Foundation, hosted an eco-friendly Ganesh idol-making workshop. The event, organized by the Municipal Corporation's Environment and Pollution Control Department, was held at the Suresh Vajpayee Hall in the Kailas Sports Complex, Kalyan. This workshop aimed to raise awareness among school children about the importance of using eco-friendly materials, like Shadu clay, for making Ganesh idols and promoting a cleaner, greener environment during Ganesh Chaturthi celebrations. The event witnessed an overwhelming response from the students of municipal, private, and unaided schools from the Kalyan-Dombivli region. The hall was filled with the joyful sounds of children, who eagerly began crafting their eco-friendly idols. From 8:00 AM, the venue buzzed with excitement as young students immersed themselves in the process of making their idols with great enthusiasm and skill. The workshop was inaugurated by dignitaries including MLA Rajesh More, Municipal Commissioner Abhinav Goyal, and Deputy Police Commissioner AtulZende, who praised the students' creativity and dedication. They encouraged the children to adopt eco-friendly practices during Ganesh celebrations, emphasizing the importance of environmental preservation. "Green Ganapati, Fruitful Ganapati", the theme for the event, was introduced by Municipal Commissioner Abhinav Goyal, who stated that the goal of the workshop was to inspire students to understand the environmental impact of traditional idol-making practices and encourage the use of natural materials. In a historic achievement, the workshop broke the existing world record for the largest number of eco-friendly Ganesh idols created in a single event. The previous record, held by the Pollution Control Board of Bangalore with 3,308 idols, was surpassed when 4,657 students at this event crafted their own eco-friendly Ganesh idols. The feat was officially recognized by both the India Book of Records and the OMG Book of Records, as confirmed by Seema Manikhot from the India Book of Records and Dr. Dinesh Gupta from OMG Book of Records. The event was not only a creative success but also a significant step toward building environmental consciousness. By 1:00 PM, the workshop concluded with a pledge from all 5,245 participants, including students, teachers, and municipal employees, to work toward environmental conservation. The OMG Book of Records also took note of this environmental pledge. The success of the workshop was attributed to the hard work of RohiniLokre, the Executive Engineer of the Environment Department, and her team, as well as the Education Today Foundation's Bharat Malik and Vrinda Bhuskute. Special appreciation was also extended to the talented artisans—Sachin Godambe, MinalLele, ShekharIshwad, Santosh Jambhulkar, and GunesAdwal—who guided the students in creating their idols. The event was graced by several officials, including Additional Commissioner Harshal Gaikwad, City Engineer Anita Pardeshi, Chief Auditor Suresh Bansode, and other senior municipal staff, who provided moral support and encouragement to the students. The event was a true testament to the collective effort of the community in promoting sustainability and protecting the environment.

Thousands Devotees Join The Grand ‘Kawad Yatra’ in Chandivali

A Grand ‘KawadYatra’ to mark the Holy and Auspicious Shravan month was organised by MLA Dilip Lande in Chandivali

MUMBAI, (SACHIN MURDESHWAR):

The annual KawadYatra held in Chandivali during the holy month of Shravan witnessed a massive turnout of devotees chanting “HarHar Mahadev” and “Bam Bam Bhole”. Organised under the leadership of Shiv Sena MLA Dilip (Mama) Lande, the yatra aimed to uphold Hindu culture and traditions. Accompanied by devotional DJ music, firecrackers, and saffron-themed decorations, the procession began from Sheetal Talao and proceeded via Kajupada Pipeline to the Shri Shambho Mahadev Temple on Sunday, August 10.As every year, this year’s event also drew enthusiastic participation. Thousands of North Indian women dressed in saffron sarees carried sacred pots (Kalash) to offer water to Lord Shambho Mahadev, while hundreds of men in saffron kurtas carried Kawads. The procession featured tableaux of Hindu deities including Lord Shiva, Shri Ram, and Hanuman. Holy water was specially brought from the sacred city of Kashi for the ritual bathing (Jalabhishek) of the deity.Speaking at the event, MLA and Shiv Sena (EknathShinde faction) leader DilipLande said the yatra not only demonstrated saffron strength and devotion but also expressed support for Chief Minister EknathShinde and the BJP-Shiv Sena-led state government. “We pray that Lord Shambho Mahadev blesses Chandivali’s development,” he added.The yatra saw the presence of former corporatorShailaLande, youth leaders PranavLande and PrayagLande, North Indian Association Chandivali President Ramprasad Dubey, Secretary Bhaskar Singh, Women’s Taluka President Sarita Mishra, along with a large number of Shiv Sena leaders, office-bearers, and workers.

‘Repackaged Sedition’: Supreme Court to Examine Section 152 of BNS

The Supreme Court has agreed to examine the constitutional validity of Section 152 of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita (BNS), which reintroduces the colonial sedition law. The apex court on August 8 issued notice in a petition that challenges section 152 of the BNS which was previously codified as Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code (IPC).The plea, filed by the Union government on the petition filed by retired Major General S.G. Vombatkere, through advocate S. Prasanna, claims that Section 152 of the BNS has “revived and repackaged” the sedition provisions in the IPC, after the Supreme Court had barred the filing of FIRs under Section 124A of the IPC.“Though the language has been altered, in substantive context, it still criminalises vague and broad categories of speech and expressions as ‘subversive activity’, ‘encouragement of separatist feelings’, and acts ‘endangering unity or integrity of India’- remains the same or is even more expansive,” the petitioner has claimed. Vombatkere was among petitioners who had challenged the validity of the IPC section too. In May 2022, a bench headed by the then Chief Justice of India N.V. Ramana had suspended the usage of the statute, preventing the police from invoking the section against anyone. Justice Ramana had also stayed the probe and trial in existing cases. The court had called for re-examination of the provision. Later in April 2023, a bench led by the then CJI D.Y. Chandrachud had referred the issue to a five- judge bench and asked to decide on the validity of the IPC section.Last year, the IPC came to be replaced with the BNS law but the provision was reintroduced. Many legal experts and activists have raised concerns over the existence of the provision in the statute. The plea points out that, “Section 152 criminalises a wide spectrum of expressive conduct, including those who ‘purposely or knowingly’ use words – spoken, written, electronic, symbolic or financial – to ‘excite or attempt to excite’ secession, rebellion or subversive activities. Its sweeping language, including phrases like ‘encouraging feelings of separatist activities’, fails the test of constitutional validity due to vagueness, overbreadth, chilling effect, disproportionate punishment and absence of proximate nexus to public disorder.”

World Lion Day: India Celebrates, But How Are Its Lions Really Doing?

DINESH SINGH: At an event to celebrate the day at Gujarat’s Barda Wildlife Sanctuary, Union environment minister BhopenderYadav and Gujarat chief minister Bhopender Patel were the main dignitaries on the dais. Today we say with great pride that if anyone wants to see the Asiatic lion, they have to come to Gir in Gujarat,” Yadav said, commenting on the increase in lion numbers (from 284 in 1990) to 891 in 2025 – the latter recorded during the latest lion census undertaken by the state government this year.Per the Census and the event of August 10, Barda is now the ‘second home’ of the Asiatic lion; 17 lions currently live in Barda. On August 10, the Gujarat CM also announced funding of Rs.180 crore to develop the new habitats for lions in the state.An increase in lion numbers, a new home for lions, and funds to the tune of Rs.180 crore – all paint a glowing picture of India and its Asiatic lions. But how are India’s lions really doing?Conservationists are not very impressed. Scientists told The Wire that while the Asiatic lion population in Gujarat may have indeed risen, the use of out-dated and flawed methodology in the latest lion census means that its findings need to be taken with a dollop of salt.Meanwhile, even though Gujarat is setting up a ‘second home’ in the state for lions at Barda Wildlife Sanctuary, this will not be ideal because it is just around 100 km from Gir, biologists told The Wire. And Gujarat still refuses to part with its lion prides. Despite a Supreme Court order in 2013 that some lions should be relocated into Kuno National Park in Madhya Pradesh, nothing has moved. While cheetahs have come into Kuno all the way from Africa, India’s Asiatic lions still do not have a home in another state in their own country.This could affect their survival. With the entire population of Asiatic lions being located exclusively in Gujarat, a single disease outbreak could easily wipe them out, biologists say. News reports have recorded a few recent lion deaths too.

A looming threat
Single population species – or species that survive in only one natural population in a single, isolated geographic area – are at a huge risk of extinction. A prime reason: disease. A single major disease outbreak – such as a virus – could wipe out such isolated single populations of species very quickly, coupled with other existing threats such as persecution by people, climate change and habitat loss.These fears are justified because this has happened in the past. The Christmas Island Rat, a rat native to the Christmas Island in the Indian Ocean and found only there is thought to have gone extinct between 1898 and 1908, after contracting parasitic protozoans called trypanosomes from black rats (that came to the island accidentally as stowaways on expedition ships).The Asiatic lion which dwells in Gujarat, however, is technically not a separate species of lion from their cousins in Africa. They’re a separate sub-species: which means they are not different enough to be called a different species, but distinct enough – both physically and genetically – to be a different sub-species. And Gujarat’s Gir is the Asiatic lions’ onlyhome. Recent Asiatic lion deaths in the district of Amreli in Gujarat have worried conservationists. In late July this year, news reports recorded the death of three lion cubs in Amreli; forest authorities have kept six other cubs and three lionesses under observation. In 2018, a combination of several health concerns including canine distemper – caused by a highly communicable virus – and a protozoal infection had killed more than 30 lions in Gujarat in a month’s span. Early this year, the Gujarat state government said in the Gujarat Assembly that 286 lions including 143 cubs had died between January 2023 and December 2024. At least 58 lions and 17 cubs died unnaturally, reported The New I E.“It is prudent conservation practice based on strong scientific foundations not to have all members of an endangered species existing at a single site,” commented big cat biologist Ravi Chellam, who has been involved with lion conservation since 1985.“Any catastrophe natural or human-mediated can in a very short span of time wipe out the hard-won conservation success and lay to waste several decades of work, if all surviving members of an endangered species are restricted to a single population. The risks are numerous and include habitat fragmentation, degradation and destruction, cyclones, floods, forest fires, disease outbreaks, political decisions, droughts, poaching, violence and wars,” Chellam said.

Rising numbers, expanding ranges
On May 21 this year, Gujarat CM Patel announced results from the latest census of Asiatic lions. Their number has risen from 674 to 891 in five years, he said. The Census document claims that lion populations have also expanded their range (35,000 sq km now, an increase by around 16% when compared to 2020). ‘I suppose there is some merit in this claim. From the available information including maps, it looks like they have computed this area by joining the locations of the lion sightings farthest from Gir,” commented Chellam.Per the Census, nearly half of the lion population (44%) has been observed in “non-forest areas” – wasteland, agricultural lands, riverine areas and near human habitation.The bulk of this area where the expansion of Asiatic lions has occurred is human-dominated areas including cities and towns which are not very suitable for lions to inhabit, Chellam said.“It does throw up challenges,” Chellam commented. “People’s lives are disrupted and the lions are also under stress. There are reports of lions turning aggressive and attacking people. There was a recent report of a man being attacked and killed by lions. This is bound to happen especially since people approach the lions closely on foot and often harass the lions. In fact, it is a miracle that the number of attacks are so low, given the extremely frequent interactions and the resulting opportunities for lions to attack people.”On June 25, a lion dragged a five-year-old from a farm near Thordi village near Savarkundla range in Amreli district. The boy, who was mauled in the attack, died. The state forest department captured the lion and moved it to a rescue center, according to a report by the Press Trust of India. The latest Census recorded the presence of lions for the first time in Amreli: the district did not host lions before. Again in Savarkundla, forest department watchers found the body of a partially-eaten man in March this year. This came just a week after Amreli witnessed a lion kill a farmer, drag his body away and sit on it refusing to let go until forest officials intervened.

Flaws in census methods

Most people do not look beyond the main result of the latest lion census – that lion numbers have increased. Prime Minister NarendraModi too raved about this rise. In his 122nd episode of Mann Ki Baat on May 25, he said:“This number of lions that emerged after the lion census is very encouraging. Friends, many of you must be wondering how this animal census is conducted! This exercise is very challenging. You will be surprised to know that the Lion Census was conducted in 11 districts, in an area of 35 thousand square kilometres. For the census, the teams monitored these areas round the clock... twenty four hours. Both verification and cross verification were done in this entire campaign. This enabled the counting of lions to be completed with utmost precision.”But there’s more to the Census – and it turns out that “precision” may have been the last thing that the exercise involved. While the Asiatic lion population may indeed have risen, scientists who have studied both the Asiatic lion as well as methods to accurately estimate big cat populations across the world – including African lions – told The Wire that the outdated and flawed methodology in India’s lion census leaves much to be desired.The methodology employed to count the Gir lions falls within the broad category of ‘index-based methods’ in wildlife abundance estimation literature, scientist ArjunGopalaswamy, told The Wire. Gopalaswamy is the founder and chief scientist of Carnassials Global, an organisation that provides science advisory services to governments, universities, etc. in Africa and Asia, and has co-authored studies on population estimation of big cats including tigers in India, African lions in Uganda and South Africa and African cheetahs in Kenya. This category of ‘index-based’ methods is now considered outdated, as it fails to account for detection probability, rendering the information generated by such surveys unreliable, Gopalaswamy said. Detection probability is the probability that observers detect signs of an animal in an area, if it is present there.“Consequently, any perceived changes in abundance are also unreliable,” Gopalaswamyadded.The latest “contemporary and robust approach” to counting lions relies on obtaining unambiguous individual identities, he said. This is now done predominantly through direct photography and complemented by other field methods. Moreover, this has to be done “within a rigorous spatial capture-recapture framework”, Gopalaswamy added. Spatial capture-recapture means a photo capture system where a region is divided into smaller blocks, or grids, and camera traps are deployed in these areas over a fixed amount of time taking into account the home ranges of lions. The number of lions here is then estimated using mathematical models, based on the number of times a specific individual was “caught” and “recaptured” by the camera traps. “This approach has been successfully implemented at large scales across several countries and specific sites in Africa,” Gopalaswamy said.This is the same method that India too uses to estimate its tiger numbers. So why isn’t this more advanced and scientifically more robust technique being used to count lions? Because India does not use this method for lions yet, it “significantly lags behind many countries and sites in Africa in the scientific estimation of wild lion populations”, Gopalaswamy said. Even big cat biologist Y.V Jhala who was formerly with the government-run Wildlife Institute of India has been cautious about the numbers presented in the lion census. He told Al Jazeera in June this year that a “total count of wide-ranging wild carnivores is not a scientific way of estimating their population”.

Why does this matter?
Firstly, it raises questions about the validity of lion population estimation numbers that India is proudly celebrating. And secondly, bad science can be deleterious – for both people and wildlife – because this can influence conservation action in several ways.“An emerging trend of concern is that changes in lion numbers, based on unreliable index-based methods, are being adopted uncritically in IUCN assessments, including the Red List and Green Status List,” Gopalaswamy said. “Worryingly, these trends are also being incorporated into scientific manuscripts without adequate questioning.”

A second home for India’s lions?
Biologists including Chellam have recommended time and again that Gujarat relocate some of its Asiatic lions to another site away from Gir to ensure that another, standalone population thrives in another location. But the Gujarat state government has resisted these suggestions, and even orders to this note from the Supreme Court. In April 2013, the Supreme Court had ordered that a few lions be translocated from Gir to Kuno within six months. But Gujarat has refused to share Asiatic lions with any other state so far. It is important to not forget that translocating lions to Kuno is “the law of the land” because of the Supreme Court order, Chellam added. “It is well over twelve years since this order was passed and tragically, everyone concerned has chosen to ignore this order of the Supreme Court of India.”In this regard it is “disappointing” to see the “levels of impunity” with which the State Government of Gujarat and also the Government of India have been operating at, he said.The governments are now setting up Barda as a ‘second home’ for the lions – but it is not ideal, Chellam commented. “Barda, as the crow flies, is less than 100 km from Gir, small in size (less than 200 sq.km), with a very low-density prey population and hence unsuitable to host a viable population of lions,” Chellam cautioned. The whole point in translocating a few lions to establish a second free-ranging population of wild Asiatic lions outside Gir is to ensure geographical isolation, he added. This geographical isolation is necessary to mitigate the risks of having the entire population of an endangered species as a single population. “Conservation of lions and in fact, most species, doesn’t require astronomical budgets,” Chellam noted. “What is required is knowledge-based plans which are implemented in a transparent, inclusive and accountable manner. Harping on Barda as a second home is merely a distraction and a delaying tactic to continue to stall the translocation of lions to Kuno.”by-Aathira Perinchery.

Modi Govt Posting ‘Outsiders’, ‘Jettisoning of Local Officers’ Led to Pahalgam Intel Failure: J&K Human Rights Forum

DINESH SINGH: The Forum for Human Rights in Jammu and Kashmir (FHRJK) – an informal group of concerned citizens that includes the likes of former Union home secretary GopalPillai, former Supreme Court judges MadanLokur and Ruma Pal, former chief justice of Delhi and Madras high court A.P. Shah, and former member of group of interlocutors for Jammu and Kashmir Radha Kumar – in its recently released report has placed the blame entirely on the NarendraModi government for the “return of cross-border militancy” in Kashmir. “The Union Home Ministry’s policy of placing non-State officers (‘outsiders’) to helm civilian security and governance” and “jettisoning of experienced local officers” that followed as a result of the NarendraModi government’s unilateral decision to reorganise Jammu and Kashmir as a union territory and concentrate power in its own hands “entailed a paucity of intelligence from the ground and contributed to the security lapses that allowed cross-border militancy to return to the PirPanjal and Chenab valley areas of Jammu from 2020-2021 on, and then allowed it to spread to Kashmir...,” the report states. “It contributed, too, to the failure to prevent the Pahalgam terrorist attack,” it adds. The 2025 report is the sixth annual report released by the FHRJK, which was formed after the Union government diluted Article 370 and reorganised Jammu and Kashmir. Compiled on the basis of government sources, media accounts, NGO fact-finding reports, interviews and information gathered through legal petitions, the report notes that in spite of the assembly elections in September-October 2024, the people of the union territory continue to feel disempowered.It says that the Transaction of Business Rules issued by the Union home ministry on July 12, 2024, months ahead of the assembly elections, ensured that the Union government retained most of the administrative powers in J&K through the Lieutenant-Governor and held control over “civil servants, the police, the Attorney-General, and prosecutorial services”. The report states that the extent of the Union government’s control could be gauged from the fact that soon after the Omar Abdullah government came to power with a comprehensive majority, the L-G returned his proposal for “allocation of portfolios to Ministers and establishment of a mechanism to resolve difference of opinion between the elected and centrally appointed administrations, with queries as to whether it was in accordance with the Jammu and Kashmir Reorganisation Act of 2019.”It further notes that post-Pahalgam attack, the situation has worsened in J&K, as despite the fact that Kashmiri people condemned the Pahalgam attack and repudiated the terrorists goals to foment Hindu-Muslim polarisation and instability, the police investigators hastily announced the involvement of two Kashmiris in the attack, only to retract later. However, in the meantime, the evidence-less declaration resulted in a pan-India backlash against Kashmiris, the report says.“Allegedly, over 2,800 people have been detained or summoned for questioning and over 100 have been arrested under the draconian Public Safety Act (PSA) and Unlawful Activities Prevention Act (UAPA). There are daily cordon and search operations as well as raids; continuing purges of local officers; intimidation of the media, and other scantily verified or unjustified harassments detailed in this report’s section on civilian security,” the report says, adding that “the post-Pahalgam environment, which was widely conducive to the re-establishment of peace building initiatives, is thus already being vitiated.”The report goes on to recommend that such “vitiation of civil and political rights, including oversight institutions” can be contained only by granting the promised statehood to the union territory. Yet, there are still no signs by the Modi government of “fulfilling its promise”, even after several MPs demanding restoration of statehood in J&K in the run-up to the monsoon session of the parliament.The forum has demanded a rollback of the Jammu and Kashmir Reorganisation Act, 2019, and an immediate discussion between Ladakhi representatives and the Union government on demands of Ladakh’s statehood and its incorporation in the Sixth Schedule, too.

Pahalgam security lapse
The report found that there was “a major security lapse by the Lieutenant-Governor’s administration and the Union Home Ministry” in the case of Pahalgam terror attack. The report confirmed that intelligence warning of an attack was “received in actionable time” but the security reviews were both “feeble and incompetent”.A Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) picket close to the Baisaran meadow, where the attack took place, was removed in January, 2025, the report notes, and was not reinstated even after intelligence inputs about a possible attack.Further, the FHRJK found that “the responsibility of Union home minister Amit Shah remains to be acknowledged” as he “personally supervised repeated security reviews following the intelligence that an attack was being planned”. The report also holds the Union government accountable for not preventing a backlash against Kashmiris in various parts of India and allowing hate speech and hateful actions against them in the aftermath of Pahalgam terror attack.The FHRJK expressed concern about Pakistani military response to ‘Operation Sindoor’ that it thought “revealed a new level of China-Pakistan defence cooperation” that included not only supply of arms but also “onsite guidance by Chinese military-strategic personnel”. This, the report says, deviates from China’s earlier stance of non-involvement in the India-Pakistan conflict, and can add to India’s challenges in the context of “China’s encroachments in Ladakh”. Despite the Union government increasing expenditure on security in J&K, amounting to Rs 1347.79 crores, the FHRJK believes that merely enhancing security measures could be ineffective as the Pahalgam incident showed. “...the immediate and past lessons of counterinsurgency are being ignored. As our own experience has repeatedly shown, armed attacks dwindle only when the local people and their elected representatives are involved in peace building on the ground, and when security forces are seen to adhere to the human rights guidelines laid down by the Supreme Court in 1997, which were included in the Indian Army’s ‘List of Dos and Don’ts’ under the Armed Forces (Special Protection) Act,” the report says. Apart from pressing for restoration of statehood for J&K and Ladakh, the FHRJK recommended opening a dialogue between parliamentarians and members of legislative assembly on the special status of J&K and reinstating J&K’s oversight commissions like the Human Rights Commission, the Women’s Commission, the Accountability Commission and the Information Commission which were shut down after Article 370 was hollowed out. Divya Deshmukh Continues Winning Run, Beats Lei Tingjie At Women's Speed Chess Champs

New Delhi, (Agencies) :

Star Indian chess player DivyaDeshmukh, who recently won the Women's World Cup, has continued her winning streak as she went on to beat Chinese GM Lei Tingjie at the Women's Speed Chess Championship, which is a family of annual blitz chess tournaments held and hosted by Chess.com.Divya thrashed Tingjie 10-3 to reach the quarters of the tournament on Monday.The teenage Divya, who became a GM herself after winning the World Cup in Georgia in July, dominated Tingjie in her opening round clash. Divya will take on three-time world champion HouYifan, another Chinese Grandmaster, for a place in the semis on Thursday.After the first segment, Divya led 3.5-0.5. She further tightened her grip on the game as the scoreline read 7.5-1.5 in her favour after the second segment.Last month, Divya defeated compatriot Koneru Humpy in the finals of the Women's World Cup for her biggest victory in her career.R Vaishali, the other Indian in the field, was eliminated after losing 6-8 to US IM Alice Lee last week. While the men's speed chess championships began in 2016, since 2019, Chess.com has held the women's and junior speed chess championships as well.

Chinese GM JuWenjun is the reigning women's speed chess champion and Indian GM D Gukesh is the reigning Junior Speed Chess Champion.The Women's Speed Chess Championship is an online single-elimination event featuring 16 players, comprising eight qualifiers and eight direct invites, competing for a total prize pool of $75,000.In the opening round and the quarters, the players play 5+1 matches (time control of 5 minutes with an increment of one second per move) for 45 minutes, followed by 3+1 matches for 30 minutes and 1+1 matches for 15 minutes.The scoring system awards 1 point for a victory and 0.5 points to each player for a draw, with the match winner being the competitor who accumulates the most points across all segments.Five years back, the Youth Speed Chess Championship and the IM not a GM Speed Chess Championship were introduced as further spin-off events.

Trump's Ukraine 'Territory Swap': What The Deal Could Look Like On Map Vs Reality On Ground

Moscow , (Agencies) :

The announcement of a Donald Trump-Vladimir Putin summit in Alaska on August 15 has brought a contentious idea to the fore: a potential "territory swap" in Ukraine in exchange for a ceasefire. The proposal, as reported by CNN after US special envoy Steve Witkoff's recent Moscow visit, would see Kyiv cede remaining parts of Donetsk still under its control to Russia in return for halting the fighting and freezing the current frontlines elsewhere.Donetsk and neighbouring Luhansk lie in eastern Ukraine along the Russian border. Together they form the Donbas region, a flashpoint since 2014 when Moscow-backed separatists seized parts of both provinces. Those areas remained under rebel control until Russia's full-scale invasion in 2022, after which Moscow declared the "liberation" of additional cities and claimed the entire region as annexed.While the United States hopes the meeting could pave the way for an end to the war, the notion of trading land for peace has already been rejected outright by Ukraine and has triggered deep unease in towns that would be directly affected.

What Is The Territory Swap Idea?

According to CNN, the Kremlin's pitch to Witkoff included an offer to exchange a ceasefire for territory in Donbas that Russia has not yet conquered. For Moscow, the aim is to consolidate its hold on Donetsk and Luhansk, completing its long-sought control over the industrial heartland — a region rich in coal, heavy industry and infrastructure that has been at the centre of conflict since 2014.Trump has previously said both sides would need to cede territory to end the fighting, remarks that reinforced Kyiv's fears the US could seek to impose a deal over Ukrainian objections. The scenario most frequently discussed would see Ukraine withdraw from the remaining areas of Donetsk it controls, with Russia halting its offensives in Zaporizhzhia and Kherson and accepting a frozen line of contact.For Kyiv, this would mean surrendering towns it has fought to hold and that residents have struggled to rebuild, while legitimising Russian gains from an invasion that began in 2022. For Moscow, it would formalise battlefield progress and allow it to declare victory in the Donbas.

The View FromSloviansk

On the ground, the reaction is one of disbelief, defiance and anxiety. CNN reported from Sloviansk, a city first seized by Moscow-backed separatists in 2014 and retaken by Ukraine later that year, that residents are living with regular shelling and the proximity of the eastern front.On the beaches of the town's tiny salt lake, where locals seek relief in medicinal waters under the shadow of a concrete bomb shelter, talk of a land deal feels surreal.Local journalist Mykhailo told CNN he calls the place "the Salt Lake City of Sloviansk" and said the rumours have caused "panic" among friends who fear they will be forced to leave again. "Many of my friends want to stay here... but frankly speaking I don't think it is going to happen," hesaid.The idea that their key ally, the United States, could contemplate handing their town to Moscow is particularly jarring. New trenches have been dug west of Sloviansk in case Russia's offensive pushes closer, but few imagined that the risk could come from a political bargain rather than a battlefield defeat. The Battlefield Reality

Any talk of redrawing the map in Alaska has to contend with the reality that the frontlines are still shifting, and in places, moving in Russia's favour. The Donetsk region, central to Moscow's demands, is seeing some of the fiercest fighting of the summer. Russian forces are pushing westwards, with artillery and drone strikes expanding the so-called "danger zone" far behind the immediate front. Control over key hubs like Pokrovsk and Kostiantynivka, both major logistics and transport nodes, is vital; losing them would complicate Ukraine's ability to supply and reinforce troops defending the rest of Donetsk.Sloviansk, one of the largest cities in the Ukrainian-held part of Donetsk, is close enough to hear shelling daily. Just 20 kilometres away, the nearest train station in Kramatorsk bustles with soldiers heading to and from the front, and civilians trying to evacuate or return home. Air raid sirens greet trains arriving from Kyiv, underscoring that even Ukraine's rear areas remain under threat.For many residents, the strategic maps debated in distant capitals feel irrelevant compared to the immediate risk to loved ones. A woman named Tetyana told CNN she had travelled to see her husband, a tank unit soldier, for just two days to mark his birthday. "I just want my husband to be alive and come home," she said. The prospect of a political deal trading away nearby territory doesn't factor into her calculations, survival does.

Trump's Position and Leverage

From the start of his presidency, Trump has called for a 30-day unconditional ceasefire as the prelude to peace talks. Ukraine accepted this in March; Russia did not. Since then, Moscow has escalated, with attacks described as having doubled since Trump entered office, according to CNN.In recent weeks, Trump has sought to increase pressure on Putin. He unveiled a policy linking failure to accept a ceasefire to escalating sanctions not just on Russia but on buyers of Russian energy — a move that has already led to increased tariffs on India. He has also reaffirmed continued US military support to Ukraine via NATO allies and highlighted allied commitments to increase defence spending. These moves, coupled with Russia's heavy military losses, form the basis of the White House's argument that Trump arrives in Alaska from a position of strength.

The Reagan Parallel

In October 1986, US President Ronald Reagan met Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland, to explore ways to ease Cold War tensions and cut nuclear arsenals. The talks came close to producing a breakthrough, but collapsed when Gorbachev demanded the US abandon its nascent missile defence programme, something the Soviets saw as a threat to their deterrent. Reagan refused, and both leaders walked away without an agreement. At the time, it was widely labelled a failure.Yet that refusal to compromise on a core principle is now seen as pivotal. Within a year, Washington and Moscow signed the first treaty eliminating an entire class of nuclear weapons. By 1991, the two powers had agreed to sweeping arms reductions, all while the US continued developing missile defence. Reykjavik is remembered as a moment when walking away set the stage for a better deal later.For Alaska, the comparison lies in the negotiating stance. The logic is that Trump should insist on his declared condition — a full, unconditional 30-day ceasefire — before entertaining any maps, prisoner swaps or political concessions. Agreeing to a territory swap without first silencing the guns could entrench Russia's battlefield gains, legitimise its claim to the rest of Donetsk, and allow it to rearm for future offensives.As in 1986, leaving without a deal might look like failure in the moment but could strengthen the chances of a more durable peace later.

Why Ukraine's Absence At The Table Raises Concerns

The Alaska summit is being held without Ukraine's participation, a fact that adds another layer of controversy to any talk of territory swaps. The risk is that a meeting between Trump and Putin, complete with maps in hand, could produce the image Moscow covets — the US and Russia sketching out future borders of a European country that Russia invaded, all without that country's consent. Kyiv has repeatedly stated it will not accept any settlement that cedes territory, and being excluded from talks raises fears that decisions about Ukraine's future could be made without its involvement.The sequence that avoids this risk is straightforward: secure a ceasefire first, bring Ukraine in as a full participant for political negotiations second, and only then move to detailed discussions on borders or territorial arrangements.

Could A Ceasefire Work?

Trump's proposal for a 30-day unconditional ceasefire is meant to be a quick test of Moscow's intent. Supporters of the idea point to immediate gains: stopping artillery and missile attacks could save lives in towns like Sloviansk, Pokrovsk and Kostiantynivka, which are under near-daily fire; humanitarian corridors could be opened to evacuate civilians and deliver medical supplies; and damaged infrastructure could be repaired without the risk of shelling.A workable ceasefire would require detailed terms: halting offensive ground movements, banning strikes beyond the current line of contact, and guaranteeing aid agency access.The risks, however, are not theoretical. In 2014–15, the Minsk ceasefires broke down as Russia-backed forces used the lull to rotate troops, move equipment and prepare new offensives, a history that explains Kyiv's scepticism toward any short-term pause without a binding political framework.Military analysts caution that if Russia retains the initiative in parts of Donetsk, a short pause could lock in its latest territorial gains and weaken Ukraine's position in later talks.Critics also warn that without a clear political framework agreed in advance, a 30-day pause could simply freeze the war in place. On the other hand, advocates argue that the humanitarian benefit of halting strikes, even temporarily, outweighs the risks — especially for civilians in frontline towns who face immediate danger. Whether it works will hinge on sequencing: if a ceasefire is followed quickly by negotiations with Ukraine at the table and backed by strong enforcement, it could lay the groundwork for a broader settlement. If it is simply a pause without political progress, it risks becoming just another chapter in a grinding war.

The Bottom Line

The proposed territory swap is not a neutral bargaining chip. It represents the possibility of formalising Russia's gains in Donbas, forcing tens of thousands from their homes, and undermining the principle that borders cannot be changed by force. On the ground, it injects fresh uncertainty into communities already living on the edge of conflict.In Alaska, the outcome will likely be binary: either Putin agrees to a full ceasefire as a starting point, or the summit risks ending with the war continuing and the frontline unchanged, except for the psychological blow to those wondering if their homes will be traded away.

Salman Khan’s Battle of Galwan Mumbai Shoot Shelved, Sets Demolished

DINESH SINGH : Salman Khan’s much-anticipated film Battle of Galwan, inspired by the 2020 conflict between Indian and Chinese forces in the Galwan Valley, has seen a slight change in its shooting schedule. The Mumbai shoot, originally planned for this month, has been postponed, and the sets constructed at Mehboob Studios in Bandra are being taken down. Battle of Galwan Mumbai shoot cancelled An insider revealed to Mid-Day that the decision to postpone the Mumbai shoot was driven by creative considerations. The production is now slated to resume in Ladakh from August 22 to September 3, focusing primarily on the action sequences. The source explained that since Salman Khan sports a unique look for the film, filming with a 30-day gap between locations would affect continuity. “Apoorva (Lakhia) felt that the sequences would need to be shot in succession. So, for now, the film’s Mumbai schedule is postponed indefinitely. They will take a call in the last leg whether a song sequence or patch work needs to be done in the city,” the report added.

No official hurdles with the Defence Ministry Contrary to circulating rumours about possible issues with the Ministry of Defence over the film’s sensitive subject, a reliable source clarified that the project is proceeding with full permissions. The film is intended to honour the courage of Indian soldiers and does not portray any nation negatively. “The makers wouldn’t have announced the film without permissions in place,” the source confirmed, as reported. The cast Battle of Galwan also marks a fresh collaboration between Salman Khan and actress Chitrangda Singh. The cast boasts talents including Zeyn Shaw, Ankur Bhatia, Harshil Shah, Heera Sohail, Abhilash Chaudhary, and Vipin Bhardwaj.

About the film Battle of Galwan is based on true events from June 2020, when Indian and Chinese soldiers fought in the remote, high-altitude Galwan Valley in Ladakh. Although there were agreements that banned the use of guns, the clash became one of the deadliest border fights in over 40 years. Despite the tough conditions, the Indian Army showed great bravery, fighting hand-to-hand using simple weapons like stones and sticks. Salman Khan’s physical transformation for the film Salman Khan had earlier opened up about how demanding the project has been. “It is physically demanding. Every year, every month, every day it gets more and more difficult. I have to give more time now. Earlier, I would manage it in one or two weeks, but now I’m running, kicking, punching, and doing all that stuff. This film demands that. For instance, in Sikanadar, the action was different, the character was different. But this is physically difficult—especially shooting in Ladakh, at high altitudes and in cold water,” he said. Salman also revealed what lies ahead in the shoot schedule. “I have 20 days in Ladakh and then seven to eight days in cold water. We will be shooting this month,” he added. His workout sessions go beyond typical weight training and runs. Salman also trains in a high-pressure chamber at his gym—designed to simulate the altitude of Leh and help his body adjust in advance. In addition, junk food and fizzy drinks are off the menu. Recently, the motion poster of Battle of Galwan was unveiled on social media. It shows Salman Khan with bloodstains on his face and his signature moustache, hinting at a raw, emotional portrayal of patriotism and sacrifice. The visuals promise a gripping war drama set over 15,000 feet above sea level. The official release date for Battle of Galwan is still awaited.

Superman Director James Gunn Calls Batman Part II Casting Rumours ‘Nonsense’

DINESH SINGH : The news about Batman Part II’s production date, starring Robert Pattinson, has sparked a lot of excitement. Along with the announcement, lots of guesses and rumours have started about which DC characters might appear in the film. One of the biggest rumours was that Batman’s well-known sidekick, Robin, will be part of the new story. But soon after the speculation escalated online, James Gunn, the head of DC Studios, dismissed the rumour and told everyone to “stop believing this nonsense.” He said that only a few people have actually seen the script for the sequel, which is directed by Matt Reeves. James Gunn On Robin’s Role In Batman 2: A DC fan website had shared a guess that Robin might be included in the script for Robert Pattinson’s movie. In the deleted post, they also mentioned the movie will be dark like the first one and the director, along with writer Mattson Tomlin, are working hard to make it exciting and bold. Soon after, Gunn came across the post on Threads and clarified, “Guys please stop believing this nonsense. I think six of us have read the script. No one knows anything about the Batman 2.” Before this, James Gunn had responded to another rumour (Now Deleted). He wrote, “Anything you’ve heard about that movie is made up or a guess. No one in the world knows anything about the concept for the story except four people.” Warner Bros. Discovery Confirms Batman Part II Filming Warner Bros. Discovery recently announced that filming for the new Batman movie will start “next spring.” In the shareholders’ letter, the studio praised the recent success of James Gunn’s Superman movie. The note highlighted that the David Corenswet-starrer made $220 million worldwide during its opening weekend. It also became the highest-earning DC Studios movie globally since 2022. The letter mentioned, “James Gunn is busy preparing the next instalments of the DC super family, including Supergirl: Woman of Tomorrow (2026), Clayface (2026) and the next Wonder Woman. In addition, The Batman II (2027) is preparing to begin shooting next spring, among several other projects in development. The 10 year vision for the DC universe also includes an exciting array of television projects, including The Penguin, the upcoming new season of Peacemaker, and the debut of Lanterns in 2026. In a precise and measured way, the DC franchise will increasingly overlay across the studio’s broader efforts: from film and TV to consumer products, games, experiences and social.” Fans have been eager for the sequel to Matt Reeves and Robert Pattinson’s The Batman, which first hit theatres in March 2022. The Batman Part II will be released in 2027.

Interview: Jackie Chan Says He’s ‘Scared’ Of Stunts, Fears Dying On Sets: ‘I’m Not Superman’

DINESH SINGH : Jackie Chan is “scared” of stunts and fears he will die on set. The 71-year-old movie star – who started his career as a stuntman before turning to acting – has admitted he always gets nervous before filming a big scene and regularly worries that he will meet a nasty end if an ambitious action sequence goes wrong. During an appearance at the Locarno Film Festival in Switzerland, he explained: “I’m no Superman. I am scared. Before a stunt, I go: ‘Am I going to die this time?’” Chan went on to insist he’s still capable of doing his own martial arts scenes now he’s in his 70s and he always wants to make his movies the best they can be. He said: “The audience doesn’t know about the rain or the producer, or that the budget was cut. They just want a good movie. I always remember that, so I try to make every scene perfect. I think old movies were better than [what we have] today. Now, these big studios, they are not filmmakers – they are business guys. It’s very difficult to make a good movie these days.” Chan previously experience a stunt going wrong on the set of his 2020 movie Vanguard when he became trapped underwater while filming a Jet Ski chase scene. Behind-the-scenes footage showed the actor emerging from the water and saying: “Wow, this scared me to death.” The film’s director Stanley

Tong later told USA Today: “We wanted to show the outtakes to prove that even though Jackie is 66 years old, he’s a professional actor and loves action. He still wants to try anything himself. That’s his passion and dedication and devotion to the film industry.” Tong added of the Jet Ski scene: “He was stuck under the water because of a big rock behind him. And he couldn’t come up. I was very scared. But as the safety people picked Jackie out of the water. I saw him breathing and move. I said: ‘Thank God!’ I was crying at that time. Jackie said that the current was so strong he couldn’t move and he got pushed against the big rock. Jackie said that all he could think of was: ‘Stay calm’. But that night at the hotel, after dinner we had coffee. He was holding onto the coffee cup and his hand was shaking. He told me he was really scared.”

Movie-Review: ‘Dhadak 2’ Is a Radical Anti-Caste Project

DINESH SINGH : The world of Bollywood has over the decades conveniently erased the question of caste and denied a space for B.R. Ambedkar, the towering Indian democrat and anti-caste icon. The Hindi film industry has predominantly catered to the sensibilities of the privileged and kept its stories detached from social questions. The sanitised urban aesthetic charm of an apolitical GenZ has been given growing acceptability in Hindi films and conveniently sidelined the lived realities of the margin. In fact, popular narratives against the socially marginal assertions for equality, liberty and justice found cinematic representations while politics of identity assertions and social justice are abandoned. In the last few years, with the rise of right-wing political and cultural forces, more and more anti-caste struggles have been countered with caste-based insensitivities and Hindu supremacism. So much so that the upper-caste communities are extended an ‘EWS quota’ by leaving out Dalits, Adivasis and Other Backward Classes. Assertion of Ambedkarite ideology Merely three months after Anant Mahadevan’s Phule released in April, Shazialqbal’s Dhadak 2 released on August 1 brought Bollywood closer to the social realities of caste hierarchies. lqbal’s film zooms in on the ‘unequal’ inter-caste relationship between Dalit male lead Neelesh Ahirwar (Siddhant Chaturvedi) and Brahmin female lead Nidhi Bhardwaj (Tripti Dimri). The very first scene starts with a sight of the couple spending time together, while the camera slowly highlights the door where ‘Jai Bhim’ is written prominently, to publicly assert Ambedkarite ideology. Immediately, in the next scene, there is an attempt on the man’s life by a delivery man who was angered by the Dalit political assertion and an inter-caste relationship. Later the delivery guy turns out to be an upper-caste contract killer, Shankar, a self-styled advocate of caste purity. Dhadak 2 is released at a time when Dalits are mourning the dishonour killing of Tamil Dalit youth KavinSelva Ganesh for being in an inter-caste relationship with a dominant caste woman. In contrast to these tragic realities, Neelesh survives in Dhadak 2, despite quite a few attempts on his life by Vidhi’s lawyer father to uphold the ‘Brahmin gene’. Most surprisingly, lqbal has created spaces for Ambedkar throughout the backdrop of the film, and slowly yet steadily centred the film on Dalit dignity, Ambedkarite politics on campus and Dalit rage against casual casteism. What stands out in the film is director’s conscious attempt at empowerment and giving agency to Vidhi. She constantly challenges Brahminical patriarchy at home, at family gatherings and in the law university campus. It was heartwarming to see how lqbal has recognised Dalit women’s sociopolitical agency and acknowledged Dr Ambedkar’s role in it. Neelesh’s mother is a staunch Ambedkarite woman who is seen to be encouraging her son after he faces police brutality and custodial torture. She quotes the iconic example of Dr Ambedkar to encourage Neelesh to study law, telling her son, “Babasahebko koi haatnehilaagapaya, kyukiwoh barrister tha’ (Nobody could do anything to Babasaheb because he was a barrister). The urgency of Ambedkarite politics on campus Dhadak 2 has not missed a single chance to capture growing Ambedkarite politics and anti-caste awareness to counter casteist notions of merit and anti-reservationists on the Indian higher education campuses, especially after the institutional murder of Rohith Vemula. lqbal’s nuanced understanding of campus politics is remarkable. Dhadak 2 has captured the scholarship crisis, issue of disbursements and how that brutally affects SC/ST/OBC students. lqbal’s portrayal of Shekhar, an Ambedkarite activist and leader of the Ambedkar Students’ Union on a national law university campus, is well thought out and an embodiment of Kanshiram’s ‘bhagidari politics’ and Bhim Army chief Chandrashekhar’s politics of radical Dalit assertion against the right-wing caste Hindutva juggernaut. The suspension and subsequent social isolation of Shekhar and his comrades on campus is also imagined through Vemula’s politics against institutionalised caste discrimination. The film goes beyond the traditional caricature of Dalit reductionism, and is focused heavily on Dalit empowerment and upliftment and nurturing women to take up the project of annihilation of caste. Vidhi is Dimri’s strongest character yet, as Neelesh is Chaturvedi’s. Through Dhadak 2, the director has ensured three critical shifts in making caste-centred films for the future: interrogation of caste privilege; nurturing upper-caste women to outrage against the Brahminical casteism and patriarchy in both private and public spheres; and confronting caste-based hostilities with an empowered voice. Dhadak 2 ticked almost all the checkboxes, but fell short in avoiding stereotype of the Dalit face. Darkening and tanning Chaturvedi’s face was not required to establish Neelesh’s ‘Dalitness’. Bollywood needs Dalit directors, producers and actors, so that Dalit representation is ensured through self-esteem and lived experiences. Though the film is an adaptation of Mari Selvaraj’s Pariyerum Perumal, it goes beyond the original on many occasions in terms of empowering the characters, but falls a little short in bringing Ambedkar from background to the forefront of discussions. Despite this, lqbal should be lauded for projecting Ambedkar as an emancipator throughout her film. From naming Neelesh’s band the ‘Bhim Baaza Dhol Boys’ to calling the Dalit slum ‘Bhimnagar’, it was a strong message delivered. Dhadak 2 is a radical anti-caste project. lqbal’s well thought through direction will be reckoned with in Bollywood and regional film industries like Tollywood in the days to come. It’s depressing that the film like this couldn’t generate much discussion and debates among the young, as they remain engulfed in Saiyaara-by-Subhajit Naskar.
